

Question 1:

Disposable towels Vs. Reusable towels

Question 2:

Introduction:

Seven out of ten people choose reusable towels over disposable towels because they statistically ~~are~~ purchased more than paper towels according to Walmart.

My family has many reusable towels all around the house because we simply think they are better and because they are cheaper.

I recommend reusable towels because I believe that they are more useful for many different situations.

BP1: Cloth

Reusable towels are much better because they can be used more than once.

This means that you don't have to buy a new one nearly as often as you would need to if you had disposable towels.

[Reusable towels are also superior in the fact that you don't need to cut down trees to make them, you just need to put cloth together.]

BP2:

Another reason why reusable towels are greater than disposable ones is that they can be used in many different situations.

Some situations when I've needed one are when I dry my hands or clean up a mess that I spilled.

They can also be bought in lots of different stores so you can buy them almost everywhere unlike disposable ones which normally can only be bought in places where there are many trees around.

BP3:

There are some people that believe disposable towels are better than reusable ones.

These people think this because if you reuse a towel then all of that dirt and dust will stay on the towel so it won't really clean you.

They also think that paper towels can absorb more dirty things than cloth can, making it a finer way to clean yourself.

Conclusion:

This is why I think that reusable towels are superior to disposable towels for cleaning things.

Reusable towels are more suitable in different situations which is why I think that they are better than disposable towels.

Question 3:

I recommend that reusable towels are better than disposable towels because they are better in different situations and they are cheaper.
